Bio:

Kevin F. Adler is a social entrepreneur, author, and keynote speaker whose work explores how connection and belonging help people navigate life's hardest moments. His work is grounded in a simple idea: community is the antidote to catastrophe.

Adler is the founder and board chair of Miracle Messages, where he pioneered the concept of "relational poverty" as an overlooked cause and consequence of homelessness. Since 2014, Miracle Messages has reunited more than 1,200 unhoused neighbors with loved ones, facilitated more than 500,000 minutes of calls and texts between unhoused people and caring volunteers, and distributed more than $3 million in direct cash transfers to unhoused individuals.

He is the author of When We Walk By, which Publishers Weekly called "a must-read for anyone interested in solving the problem of homelessness," and Natural Disasters as a Catalyst for Social Capital, which examines how shared trauma shapes community resilience. His work has been featured in The New York Times, The Washington Post, NPR, and PBS NewsHour, and has reached tens of millions of people through storytelling campaigns and his TED Talk.

Adler is currently pursuing a Ph.D. in Sociology at the University of Wisconsin–Madison while working on his next book. He holds graduate degrees from UC Berkeley's Goldman School of Public Policy and the University of Cambridge. Say hi at kevinfadler.com or @kevinfadler.

Synopsis:

Think about the last time you saw or interacted with an unhoused person. What did you do? What did you say? Did you offer money or a smile, or did you avert your gaze?

When We Walk By takes an urgent look at homelessness in America, showing us what we lose—in ourselves and as a society—when we choose to walk past and ignore our neighbors in shelters and insecure housing or on the streets. And it brilliantly shows what we stand to gain when we embrace our humanity and move toward evidence-based, people-first, community-driven solutions.
